Winterhaven is a peaceful and prosperous town by any standards. Life has been pleasant for longer than most can remember. The times they are a changing. The once plentiful supply of Mithril ore from the dwarven clans who dwell within the Silverpeak mountain has dried up. All signs point to some mysterious reason behind the lack of Mithril ore but the dwarves aren't talking. All attempts to parley with them have resulted in nothing but frustration by the good council of elders who rule over Winterhaven. Now it would seem that the dwarves have started to become hostile towards anybody who even approaches their warrens.

Journey into the depths of Silverpeak mountain to find the true reason behind the lack of Mithril. If you are brave and cunning, you may even live to tell your tale.

Confront your old nemesis Morbius. The litch who has nearly killed you all twice in the past. Like an old wound that never heals he is once again out to rule the world with the aid of "The Geyser."

But wait! Morbius alone is not the worst of the dangers you face. You will have to battle strange beasts that come from beyond the stars who wield weapons of a kind you have never seen. You will have to defeat giant mechanical men the size of a large inn in your quest to restore the flow of Mithril ore.

I dare say I hope you are up to the challenge as few of those who have gone before you have returned. Those that have did not retain their sanity long enough to give ample warning of the terrors they faced.

Heh! Mighty warriors such as you should have no problem with a quest such as this...
